- The published text is not legally binding because it is still under negotiation.
- The text is subject to modification as negotiations progress. In the Buenos Aires Declaration, the Ministers instructed the Negotiating Groups to intensify efforts to resolve existing divergences and reach consensus, with a view to eliminating the brackets from draft texts, to the maximum extent possible.
- The translations of the texts into the different languages may contain inaccuracies, which will be corrected in the course of the negotiations.
- Square brackets [] indicate that different points of view do exist on the text included between them.
